

Professor of Economic and Political Geography in the Department of Economics, Ca' Foscari University, Venice, where he is Director of the Interdepartmental School of Economics, Languages and Entrepreneurship, and Academic Coordinator of the Summer School in Global Studies. At Ca' Foscari he teaches Economic and Political Geography, Geopolitics, Polar Geography and Geopolitics. He is also member of the Scientific Committee and delegate for port and maritime matters of the Italian Geographical Society, Rome. His current research interests include the evolution of sea and port cities, environmental governance in coastal cities, and the social and economic dimensions of coastal and marine management efforts.