

.Architect, PhD in Urban and Regional Planning from the Polytechnic University of Catalonia. Former Director of the Master in Sustainable Urban Processes (MAPRUS), University of Concepción, with 25 years of academic and professional experience. She is a founding researcher of the Interdisciplinary Research Group on Port Cities (GRIICIP) at the University of Concepción.

Her academic and professional development has focused on understanding and addressing processes of transformation of cities, mainly port cities, from the approach of the articulation of multilevel actors, governance, and participatory planning for the achievement of sustainable urban projects. In the professional field, he has directed and collaborated in various studies and development of Territorial Planning Instruments to overcome problems such as vulnerability, deterioration and urban impoverishment, in articulation with various public and private entities. She is currently co-investigator in projects focused on processes of transformation of small-scale coastal communities, and on tools for urban design of public space from a gender and care approach.